introduction

The idea of creating a toolkit for care experienced voices seemed necessary since before the inception of ProjectChange. Yet, when we saw others try to create the concept, it was always aimed at better understanding the applications of legislation or at organisational practice. There is nothing wrong with either of these aims but we could see there was a huge gap that needed to be filled if we were ever going to have a self-sufficient and empowered community.

Very few were ever aimed directly at trying to empower care experienced people of any age or stage. This was our starting point, but it soon became obvious that if you really wanted to empower care experienced voices, the approach and ethos you should take would be valid for all voices that needed to be heard more, especially when it comes to decision-making processes and actions that affect them or their communities.

A very dedicated and passionate group of people with a variety of lived experiences created this toolkit to help others find their voice, safely and powerfully. Ultimately, the point of this toolkit is to have lived experience valued, recognised, and embedded in an equitable and holistic way throughout systems, organisations and communities.

The toolkit provides a range of activities, resources and thinking points to pick and choose from. It is not a prescriptive list but provides a nuanced approach to helping someone to find and understand their own unique voice, and how this fits within the wider world. By offering this collection we hope that the entire community has the opportunity to engage, develop, challenge and belong to a diverse community that they feel they are a part of.

The more conversations, the more the community is ours.

the logic model

The first thing the group undertook was to understand what the toolkit could be, looking far and wide at the topics and themes that could be involved in this. It was a massive area to cover but the group landed on some very strong themes that are core to all the reading below:

Self-Care; Stories; Participation; Change and Community.

The group created a logic model to help guide them through the creation of the toolkit. The logic model requires each step to be completed before the next one can be achieved and gives an idea of what the end goal is.

Step One - Discover

We will scope what is needed, where the gaps are and what's already available.

Step Two - Dream

We will explore what's possible, how it fits in the big picture and what change we would like to see.

Step Three - Design

We will engage with partners and people with lived experience to plan and develop the toolkit.

Step Four - Deliver

We will co-create an open-licensed toolkit for any voice to use to develop skills in public speaking, writing, self-care and best practice for organisations to listen.

Step Five - Enable

Care experienced people (and others with lived experience) will have the confidence and skills to use their voice safely.

Step Six - Engage

A community of change makers will be empowered to engage in conversations about language, identity and belonging and help to reframe the narrative.

Step Seven - Embed

Lived experience will be valued, recognised and embedded in an equitable and holistic way throughout systems, organisations and communities.

self-care

what is self-care?

Self-care describes the actions you take in order to promote your own physical, mental, and social health. Self-care can take many forms.

It could be ensuring you get enough sleep every night, or stepping outside for a few minutes for some fresh air.

physical

how the inside and outside parts of your body impact on you mental

how you feel and how your brain thinks about itself and the people/situation around it social

how you interact with the people and world around you and how they interact back

types of self-care

Self-care can be done every day, it can be something that just allows us to relax and unwind after a difficult day. Try some of the examples below on a hard day.

listen to your favourite song

watch your favourite movie

read your favourite book

go for a relaxing bath or shower

go for a walk

what is self-care?

The key to self-care is choosing what you think will work to take away some of the daily stresses of life. There's a reason we don't go to sleep with our shoes on, the same is true for self-care, we need time to relax and not be tied up.

A good way to check-in with yourself when you're not sure how the day has gone is to write yourself 5 simple questions using the space below. Be honest with your answers and take some time for reflection.

*For example, how do I feel right now?
What brought me joy today?*

What do we mean by expert?

Those with lived experience will always be better informed than those without.

Participation = Empowerment

stories

what is my story?

What do people mean by 'my story'?

It is everything in your life. This is the good, the bad and everything in between.

As someone with lived experience, your expertise is invaluable. But you should never be made to feel that you have to share everything about your life and experiences.

No one is entitled to this information and it is your choice how much you share.

How could I use my story?

However you want, it's yours, nobody else's.

A story is more than just words on a page, it is an exploration of memories, emotions and feelings. The power of stories comes from what we take away from them. It comes from us.

Our life is made up of all of these things and more. It is our own unique opinions, thoughts and feelings that make us so special.

how do I see my story?

We can see our life (past, present and future) in many ways other than as a story. Here are some examples below.

Q. Can you think of any others?

what's my story?

Using simple sentences or words, fill in the blank space below. Can you describe:

Yourself

How Others See You

Word Prompt

What comes to mind when you think about the following words?

Me

You

Story

Experience

Then

Now

Why is my story important?

It is important to understand how you feel about your life and experiences before you engage in participation. Understanding your own perspective can be difficult but it is also what makes you who you are. You are not defined by any one action or experience.

Like a patchwork quilt, a tree, or a story, you are made up of many things and that should be celebrated.

what is voice?

Every voice is different

From accents to languages and dialects, every voice has its own unique tone. We all have a different voice, but, beyond that, it is the expression of your own thoughts, feelings and opinions.

How can I use my voice?

When it feels right. It is important for you to set your own expectations and boundaries. You should never feel that you have to share everything about yourself, or be made to feel you have to justify your presence in the room.

Why is my voice important?

Your voice is your own and you are the one to decide when, how, and if, you want to use it.

You have expertise. Sharing your thoughts on something you have lived through is always more powerful than those who haven't experienced it.

Where your story is about exploring your experiences internally, your voice is about how this translates externally, into the world.

types of voice

I can share my voice through:

talking

body language

sign language

friendships

campaigning & protest

the internet

clubs/activities

ordering a takeaway

These are just some of the ways we can share our voice.

By using our voice, we can be understood and our perspectives, thoughts, and feelings taken into account - from the biggest decisions to the smallest.

listening

what is listening?

There are many types of listening and many ways to listen.

We listen to learn and to understand other people's thoughts, ideas, and perspectives.

We each have our own story to tell, and even though we may have had similar experiences, our personal perspective and connection to those experiences differ.

It is through listening that we can tap into our shared commitment for change.

How do I listen?

Listening isn't just about hearing someone. It is about understanding what someone has said, how you feel about it, and how you are going to respond.

This is the act of listening, it is an ongoing and active process.

How should it feel?

It should feel purposeful. There is no point in listening if it goes in one ear and out of the other.

It can feel frustrating, especially when people have different opinions or approaches to a particular issue. However, no one has the right to challenge your experience.

It should also feel productive and that your expertise is acknowledged and acted upon.

What is the goal?

It is through listening that we can bring communities together and support each other. Listening and understanding supports collaboration and co-ownership, working together to bring change.

how do we listen?

Understanding other people's thoughts and feelings can be difficult, especially if they differ from your own.

In participation, people generally want to make life better. We may all want to do this, but different approaches and perspectives can cause conflict.

How do we find common ground and harness the best of different points of view? Is there a way of mapping out these tricky situations?

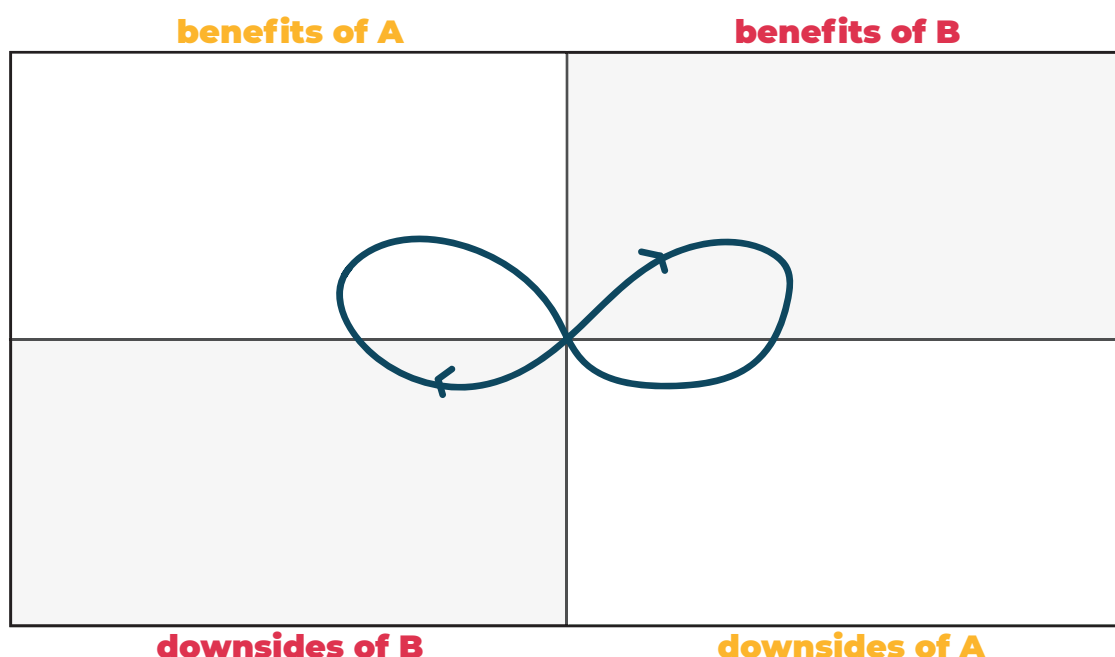

Polarity mapping

Using a polarity map, we can identify the benefits and the downsides to a particular polarity. Like breathing, inhaling and exhaling are polar opposites. Both rely on one another to maintain respiratory function but too much of either side would cause a problem. Polarity mapping finds the value in competing perspectives.

The goal in this exercise isn't to make a decision, but to value what each point of view has to offer and enrich understanding of both sides of the coin.

From this, action points and early warning signs can be predicted and acted upon before they become an issue.

How to map polarities

2. Can you think of an issue you're passionate about?

Using the empty diagram below, how would you apply the polarity model to that topic or situation?

These activities allow you to think about how your own experiences have informed your own views, and how understanding other people's perspectives can often enhance your own decision making and listening skills.

If we can move away from "you're wrong" and "I'm right" mentalities and towards a "we both have valid points," change can happen. This merging of perspectives is where we can truly create a movement and a community that works for everyone.

Polarity management is about understanding that we are an individual.

At the same time, we are also part of something much bigger. We are part of our community.
